SM-727

House near 48588 Wynne Road

Wynne Vicinity

Private

c. 1900

Overlooking the calm waters of Deep Cove near the maritime community of Wynne Maryland, the house near 48588 Wynne Road stands of reminder of how many residents in the early twentieth century, located their dwellings near navigable waters. Built circa 1900, the two story, five bay, frame dwelling features a distinctive cross gable and overall proportions that were replicated across the county during the period. It reveals how many countians took advantage of dimensioned lumber and prefabricated building materials to build their homes. Further documentation should confirm the house's date, but due to its deterioration, no further recordation is recommended.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Approached via a drive that extends to the north of Wynne Road, the house near 48588 Wynne Road commands a view of Deep Cove a tributary of Jutland Creek and ultimately the Potomac River. The property is characterized by a number of large mature trees that include a number of large loblolly pines. The house is oriented on a north/south axis and is vacant and in dilapidated condition. The low-lying, flat seven acre property also includes a non-contributing trailer.

Like many dwellings erected circa 1900, the house near 48588 Wynne Road features conventional architectural components that were mass produced during the period. While the property was not accessed and the house is largely obscured by overgrowth, the house nonetheless appears to follow this trend. Two stories in height, the five-bay frame dwelling is clad with weatherboard. The gable roof, punctuated on the south side by a cross gable, is sheathed with wood shingles. A large hole in the roof, however, has appeared threatening the integrity of the building.

The main or south elevation is pierced by five symmetrically placed openings. The fenestration consists of a central door flanked on either side by two, two-over-two, double-hung sash windows. The second floor is pierced by five, two-over-two windows. A single window of unknown sash, is located in the cross gable and lights the attic. Many of the openings have been boarded up and have lost their glass panes and frames.

The other elevations were not observed.
